THE REBEL PRISONERS.

Arrival of More Rebel Prisoners in New York.

nest intelligent men, and they talk over the great events and transpired with calmness and philosophy. They are perfectly resigned to the new order of things, and express a strong determination to go back to their homes and live henceforth good and true citizens of the United States. It is amusing to bear their spirited discussions with Union soldiers. Reminisences of former campaigns are related, the provess of Stonewall Jackson and Robert Lice extolled, while above all there runs a vein of sonest appreciation for the brilliant abilities of Grant, therman, Shoridan and our other noble generals.

The "men in gray" go back to their Southern homes setter and wiser men than when they last left there.

Thirty-three rebel prisoners, in confinement at Fort Warren, took the oath of aliagiance this morning and were at once liberated. Their names and residences are as follows:

TALK WITH THE PRIDORES.

The sixty-one robel prisoners who were released from Fort Warren yesterday morning left for New York at half-past five o'clock P. M., by the Stonington line. A harge number of citizens were attracted to the Providence dapot by the novelty of seeing some of Joff. a defenders, and induged in pleasant conversation with the repentent robe is for an hour or more. One of our reporters who was present describes the party as the most intelligent looking, in appearance, of any that has yet passed through the city from Uncle Sam's boarding house in Booton harbor. There were a considerable number of effects with this lot, and many of Mosby's men; also several captured on blockade runners, rebel sailors, &c. Gray uniforms were quite plenty, and many of them looked almost as clean as when they were first put on. Upon inquiry, one answered that on coming North on this excursion he took a change of clothing with him an nd to conduct the federals to Bichmond if the would peint out the way. This he did, and the arted off and honorably reported themselves to thorities in that city, and, says the robel, in con-, with a smile, "that detachment succeeded in what General McClellan could not do—they

A federal soldier tackled a Mobile man and was very easy in his denunciations of the manner in which the orthern prisoners had been treated. The Southern reled that a more generous, open hearted set of men did a exist than the people of the South, and that what eat they had the Confederate authorities freely shared they had the Confederate authorities freely shared shi their prisoners; that at one time, when we at the orth were hearing so much of the staryation of Union an in robel prisons, that those same prisoners were tailly receiving a better quality of food and more of even than the soldiers of the confederacy in the field sere was, he said, a great scarcity of food at that time, as what the rebels possessed the Unionists received, once in confinement at Richmond, he remarked, indied a number of shoemakers, who were supplied the the materials and manufactured boots and shoes, alch were sold at a fair price, and a liberal amount re-which were sold at a fair price, and a liberal amount resumed to the prisoners.

In conversation with a man apparently about forty pears of age, it was ascertained that by birth he was a Fennsylvanian; that in 1852 he left that State and went to New Orieans, La., where he established himself in business. By the year 1861 the peculiar ideas of the Southern people had become protty well ustilled into his mind; and, believing that the South was right, he felt it to be his duty to go with it, and did so. He engaged in the blockade business, and described it as most exciting and very interesting; but was finally captured, after several successful trips, sent to Fort Lafsyette, and from that place transferred to Fort Warren. He said that his family and all of his relatives were the strongest kind of Unionists, and four of his brothers had served bonorably in the federal array—one of whom was killed at the battie of Coal Harbor, June 3, 1864. Previous to taking the step that placed him with the secessionists he received many it therefrom home, peinting out the way he should go in such an emergency, and endeavoring to persuade him not to disgrace the family, and that immediately ofter he entered the rebel service his four brothers had callisted to make reparation, as he had since been in formed, for his act. His relatives knew nothing about him until he was placed in Fort Lafayette. From that time he had corresponded with them, and they were pleased to know that he had at last concluded to return to his allegiance.

In reference to the negro question an interesting con-him until he was placed in Fort Larayette. From that time he had corresponded with them, and they were pleased to know that he had at last concluded to return to his allegance.

In reference to the negro question an interesting conversation was had with a very intelligent Virginian. He was of opinion that the slaves would receive worse treatment now than ever before; that they were lazy—newspaper talk to the contary—he said, and would not work unless they were continually driven to it, and he did not believe Yankee masters who hired them would show that leniency that the Southerners had. He remarked that there were exceptions to all cases; but the general class of slaves were maturally averse to work. Some of the pleasantast scenes he had ever seen in his life were among the plantation negroes, and it was estener the case that the slaves were well treated than that harsh measures were resorted to. He was always opposed to the system of slavery, but believed that more misery would be caused by the hasty manner in which it had been done away with than was ever known before. Now that the slaves were free he thought they should be allowed to vote, and felt that a very large proportion of the Southerners were of the same opinion.

Several of the rebs. spoke of Vice President Stephens as a man who represented the true state of the feelings of a majority of the Southern people more than any otherman, and if the leaders had listened to him the war never would have occurred. His health was good and they thought his imprisonment at Fort Warren would not not have so serious an effect upon him as Jeff. Davis's would; that he was expable of more physical endurance and would not mind the taking away of newspapers and writing materials; but Davis was an active worker and the loss of these things would break him down, for he needed something to keep his mind busy.

The citizens in the depot supplied the rebs. freely with signar, and some tendered them money, which was not refused. Two or three men with the rebs. freely with si Government Wardon Transe En Routh —There is now on route from Washington City to Louisville, Ky., several immense government wagon trains. They travel the whole distance overland, and their great extent excites the wonder and curiosity of the people along the route, who have never seen so large a number of teams in one train. Yesterday the first of the series arrived in this city and possed over the Suspension bridge to the teland, where they will remain until this morning, when they will resume their westward march. This train numbered two hundred and fity-two wagons, and two thousand and eixteen mules, each wagon being drawn by six mules, with two leading behind. The drivers are all darkies, duly impressed with the disnity of their position, and having traveled over so large a portion of Uncle Sam's domain, they have adopted very large views as to the extent of his possessions and the amount of his wealth. They are proud of their new master and are willing to live and die in his service. The mules coming in sight of the water, and, being very thirsty, set up such a braying, the like whereof was never b fore heard in these parts. The citizens on the island had the benefit of this concert free of charge. There are yet one thousand wagons to arrive, and they will have the opportunity of enjoying similar favors, for all of which they should be truly thankful. Each train is from four to five miles long. As we behold thus one feature in military operations we wonder that the national debt is so small. It has been generally supposed that this is Sherman's wagon train; but we are informed that such is not the fact. The train is made up as Washington city from various sources. Some of the miles are a part of those brought through by sherman, by home many we are unable to say. There are also different surmises and reports as to the purpose in sending them West to meet emergences.—Waceling (W. Va.) Juzelingencer, June 18.
